FOSTERS WEATHER BULLETIN

Washington, April 18.—(Copyrighted, 1913, by W. T. Foster.)—Last bulletin gave forecasts of disturbance to cross continent April 19 to 23, warm wave 18th to 22d, cool wave 21st to 25th. The forces will be again increasing at the time this storm crosses the continent and as the storm forces will be greater than usual all should be on the watch for them; but we are as compared with those of recent not expecting it to be of great force dates.

The dangerous storms usually occur in the southeast quarter of the low or storm center and if you watch the elements and the wind, which, when the storm center gets within a day of your longitude, blows a little to the right of the storm center, you can closely determine when the storm will reach you. These bulletins seldom miss the date, when the storm will pass your locality, more than twenty-four hours. When the wind comes from some eastern point you may know the storm center is westward and moving eastward. Tornadoes occur in the southeast quarter of the low or storm center and move northeastward. They also occur near the time when the temperatures are highest.

Everyone should learn to know the easily understood conditions that prevail just before an important weather event or change in the weather. A hog, a bird, a goose knows that much. A stuffy, oppressive atmosphere indicates a storm not far away and that condition always prevails just before the tornado strikes. Before the crop-growing season is ended we will hear of more dangerous and destructive storms and these bulletins will not hesitate to make the best forecasts of them that are now possible.

Next disturbance will reach Pacific coast about April 25, cross Pacific slope by close of 26th, great Central valleys 27th to 29th, Eastern sections 30th. Warm wave will cross Pacific slope about April 25, great Central valleys 27th, Eastern sections 29th. Cool wave will cross Pacific slope about April 28th, great Central valleys 30th, Eastern sections May 1.

This will be very much like the preceding disturbance. Very warm weather, high winds near the center of the low and a gale as the high or cool wave comes in. It will not be a very great storm, but the force will be such that all should be careful. It will probably enter the continent through the State of Washington, its center go as far south in the great Central valleys as parallel 40, and then pass up through Eastern Canada.

Temperatures will average above normal from April 18 to May 3, and rain of that period will average below normal for the continent, but in a few small sections excessive rains will fall. That is always the result when severe storms cross the continent.

Severe storms are expected near May 10 and from May 21 to 30. More particulars later. Our danger signals were out March 31 to April 7. On March 31 a tornado struck New York State. April 3 another hit Missouri. April 4 and 5 severe storms from Illinois to Eastern provinces of Canada. Forecasts for March rain placed the general average below, but results show a little above normal. That limited sections would have excessive rains proved good. May is expected to bring out many dry spots, probably too dry for growing crops.
